for. If he did pay it, then it would be in the same manner as if he were paying for the goods or services himself. It is his decision to pay for what he does, and this, in the absence of any proof of fraud, is what the bills of lading reflect. Although we think the defendant's conduct in issuing these bills of lading in this case very poor, it does not rise to the level of fraud. The defendants' conduct does not amount to a misrepresentation, concealment or nondisclosure of material facts, nor does it constitute false pretenses as such.

The misrepresentation of the ostensible party to the contract in this case does not constitute fraud. 15 In reaching our decision we have been mindful of the admonition that the action be one of "white-knuckle confrontation"⁴ since we have tried not to stretch these historical facts too far to do justice to the question of what essentially is a white-knuckle problem. See United States v. Brewer, 528 F.2d 492, 494 (4th Cir. 1975); see also People of State of California v. Superior Court 3e33713323
